Lock Codes:

Author ID

This code identifies the VAR or author. It usually remains constant for all registered applications, but may vary for different versions of similar products or other reasons. (Examples: APX or ASI for APPX Software, Inc.)

Runtime

This code gives users the right to execute the application. All end-users who are licensed for the particular product should have this code on their registration. (Example: GLR for General Ledger Runtime)

Application Design

This code gives users access to application design for the specified application. If any custom design or modification will be done on the customer's system, this code should be on the registration. (Example: GLA for General Ledger Application Design)

Debug

With this code licensed, any processing errors (e.g., numeric overflow) will display event point ILF. Without it, errors will not display detail. (Example: GLD for General Ledger Debug)

Transfer In

This code is required if design transfer or data file management import are to be allowed for this application. (Example: GLI for General Ledger Transfer In)

Transfer Out

This code is required if design transfer or data file management export are to be allowed for this application. NOTE: Licensing "Transfer Out" effectively unlocks your application. (Example: GLO for General Ledger Transfer Out)

I request that APPX Software, Inc. issue the application Lock Codes specified above. I understand that, while these codes are intended to assist in controlling unlicensed and unauthorized use of software, APPX Software, Inc. makes no warranty that such unauthorized use can be completely prevented, and I agree to hold APPX Software, Inc. harmless should any such use occur.
